MARKET SUMMARY

In September, the equity market lost 0.25% month-on-month (m/m) as bearish sessions dominated market activity. The bearish sentiment was largely due to profit-taking activities by investors following strong gains in previous months. Additionally, with no positive driver in the market during the period, investors traded cautiously in anticipation of additional policy direction and implementation by the current administration.

Following the volatility in the equities market in this month, broad-based losses led to a 0.23% decline of the NGX 30 Index.

On a sectoral basis, the Consumer Goods Index rose by 6.53% m/m in September largely due to increased buying interest in BUAFOODS (12.67% m/m). The Banking Index closed 3.08% higher m/m following impressive earnings releases from UBA and FIDELITYBNK which spurred a 20.00% and 17.73% m/m rise in both stocks respectively. On the flip side, the Industrial Goods sector (-6.91% m/m) led the laggards due to the negative sentiment in BUACEMENT and DANGCEM as both stocks recorded an 11.08% and 5.56% m/m decline respectively. Similarly, the Oil and Gas Sector was down 2.75% m/m.

With no major positive catalyst on the horizon and continued strain on the macroeconomy, we anticipate similar mixed trading sessions in the next month. That said, we expect investors will begin to position ahead of the release of Q3 2023 earnings reports towards the later part of the month.
